Huffman, 12 other parents to plead guilty in college scheme

The actress is accused of making a $15,000 contribution in exchange for having her daughter's SATs corrected.

Actress Felicity Huffman and a dozen other prominent parents have agreed to plead guilty in the sweeping college admissions cheating scam that has ensnared wealthy families and athletic coaches at some of the nation's most selective universities, federal authorities said Monday.

The "Desperate Housewives" star and the other parents will admit to charges in the scheme, which authorities say involved rigging standardized test scores and bribing coaches at schools such as Yale and Georgetown.

Huffman, 56, was accused of paying a consultant $15,000 disguised as a charitable donation to boost her daughter's SAT score. Authorities say the actress also discussed going through with the same plan for her younger daughter, but she ultimately decided not to.

Other parents charged in the scheme include prominent figures in law, finance, fashion, the food and beverage industry and other fields.

It's the biggest college admissions case ever prosecuted by the Justice Department. The scandal embroiled elite universities across the country and laid bare the lengths to which status-seeking parents will go to secure their children a coveted spot.

"We have worked cooperatively with the prosecutors and will continue to do so as we take full responsibility for our bad judgment."

California real estate developer Bruce Isackson and his wife, Davina Isackson

The consultant, Rick Singer, met with Huffman and her husband, 69-year-old actor William H. Macy, at their Los Angeles home and explained to them he "controlled" a testing center and could have somebody secretly change their daughter's answers, authorities say. Singer told investigators Huffman and her husband agreed to the plan.

Macy was not charged. Authorities have not said why.

court documents.

In her first public comments since her arrest last month, she apologized and said she accepts full responsibility for her actions and "will accept the consequences."

Huffman said in a statement that her daughter did not know about her actions. She said her desire to help her daughter was "no excuse to break the law."

Michael Center, the former men's tennis coach at the University of Texas at Austin, has also agreed to plead guilty, prosecutors said Monday. Center was accused of accepting nearly $100,000 to help a non-tennis-playing applicant get admitted as a recruit.

California real estate developer Bruce Isackson and his wife, Davina Isackson, who are pleading guilty to participating in both the athletic recruitment and exam-rigging schemes, are cooperating with prosecutors for a chance at a lighter sentence.

"We have worked cooperatively with the prosecutors and will continue to do so as we take full responsibility for our bad judgment," they said in a statement.

Fellow actress Lori Loughlin, who played Aunt Becky on the sitcom "Full House," and her fashion designer husband, Mossimo Giannulli, are charged with paying $500,000 in bribes to get their two daughters admitted to USC as crew recruits, even though neither participated in the sport. They were not among those who agreed to plead guilty, and they have not publicly addressed the allegations.

Singer, the consultant, pleaded guilty to charges including racketeering conspiracy on March 12, the same day the allegations against the parents and coaches were made public in the so-called Operations Varsity Blues investigation. Singer secretly recorded his conversations with the parents, helping to build the case against them, after agreeing to work with investigators in the hopes of getting a lesser sentence.

Several coaches have also been charged, including longtime tennis coach Gordon Ernst, who's accused of getting $2.7 million in bribes to designate at least 12 applicants as recruits to Georgetown.

US blocks deal for MLB to sign Cuban players

2 The Trump administration on Monday blocked a historic agreement between Major League Baseball and the Cuban Baseball Federation that would have allowed Cuban players to sign with U.S. teams without needing to defect. The existing deal will not be allowed to go forward because it was based on an erroneous interpretation by the former Obama administration that the Cuban Baseball

Federation was not part of Cuba's communist government, a senior U.S. official said. The move essentially overturns an agreement reached between MLB and the Cuban federation in December following three years of negotiation under which Cuban players would have been able to sign with major-league teams. In the past, some Cuban stars have been smuggled off the island in speedboats. REUTERS

'Smallville' actress pleads guilty in sex-cult case

3 "Smallville" actress Allison Mack on Monday pleaded guilty to blackmailing two women as part of an alleged New York sex cult that prosecutors called a racketeering operation that carried out sex trafficking and other crimes. Mack, 36, entered her plea to racketeering and conspiracy charges before U.S. District Judge Nicholas Garaufis in federal court in Brooklyn, New York, admitting that she coerced the two unnamed women into performing services by threatening to release damaging information about them. Fighting back tears, Mack said she had joined the organization, led by self-described spiritual guide Keith Raniere, a decade ago to find purpose in life. "Through it all, I believed that Keith Raniere's intentions were to help people," she said. "I was wrong. I now realize that I and others engaged in criminal conduct." REUTERS

Trump fires Secret Service chief 'Tex' Alles

4 President Donald Trump is removing the director of the Secret Service, the White House said on Monday, a day after the ousting of Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen. The dismissal of Secret Service Director Randolph "Tex" Alles comes amid major leadership changes at the sprawling Department of Homeland Security. The Secret Service director reports to the Homeland Security secretary. The first sign of the overhaul came late on Thursday, when Trump abruptly pulled his nomination of Ron Vitiello as director of U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, part of DHS. Trump described that move as part of a policy change "going in a tougher direction." White House spokeswoman Sarah Sanders said James Murray, a career Secret Service agent, will take over the Secret Service in May. REUTERS

Boston Marathon to add para-athlete divisions in 2020

Ambulatory and amputee runners will now be awarded titles and prize money.

When Marko Cheseto lines up in Hopkinton for the start of the Boston Marathon next week, he will already be looking past the finish line, 26.2 miles away.

It's next year, when organizers will christen three new para-athlete divisions, that he will have a chance to claim something he covets even more than a new personal best: a full-fledged Boston Marathon victory, and the possibility of climbing the podium on his two prosthetic legs just steps away from the spot where so many lost their limbs in the 2013 finish-line attacks.

"I want those who were injured through that to know that we are here with them," said Cheseto, an All-American distance runner at Alaska-Anchorage who lost both feet to frostbite after he was stranded in a blizzard for 56 hours.

"We, as human beings, are very resilient; we have a lot of good people out there; we can show our solidarity out there," said Cheseto, a native Kenyan who became a U.S. citizen in November — seven years to the day after he went missing. "Together, we can do good things."

The world's oldest and most prestigious annual marathon, Boston was the first major 26.2-miler to include a wheelchair division, in 1975. Once again, the wheelchair racers will be the first to break the tape on Boylston Street on April 15, when the Boston Athletic Association stages the event for the 123rd time.

But scattered among the field of 30,000 that follows will also be people riding handcycles, running on prosthetic legs or conquering other physical impairments in the hopes of a personal best, or the satisfaction of finishing.

"They're coming to our events, and no one knows they're there," said Marla Runyan, a two-time Olympian and five-time Paralympic champion who has led the association's Athletes with Disabilities program for the past two years. "The B.A.A. wants to see people, to see them for the athletes that they are."

Starting next year, the organization will award titles — and prize money — in three divisions, recognizing not just the wheelchair racers who have been an official part of the race for four decades but also ambulatory runners who are visually impaired or amputees.

"We wanted to make sure that we were paying attention to this emerging element of the sport," B.A.A. CEO Tom Grilk said.

Runners will compete for a $1,500 top prize — men and women — from a total purse of $16,500 that is on top of the $125,000 prize pool for the wheelchair division.

Runyan, who was the top American woman in Boston when she finished fifth in 2003, has helped create qualification standards for next year's para-athlete divisions, and she will invite runners who meet them. The organization is also hosting a U.S. para-athletics classification session during marathon weekend. (For example, Cheseto is T62, double below-the-knee amputation; Runyan, who is legally blind, competed as a T13 against other runners with visual impairments.)

"I think it's been a long time coming," said Adam Popp, who lost part of his right leg to an improvised explosive device while serving with the Air Force in Afghanistan. "There's no other race out there that's going to provide what they do. And now that the ball is rolling, hopefully more people in my situation will get into the sport." ASSOCIATED PRESS

AMC green-lights third 'Walking Dead' series

The new show will start filming this summer and is set to premiere in 2020.

patrick.king@metro.us

With AMC's "The Walking Dead" being on the air for 10 seasons and its spin-off series "Fear the Walking Dead" about to start its fifth season, you would think that fans of all things related to a zombie-infested post-apocalyptic world would have their hands full. Well, they will have more to sink their teeth into as AMC announced Monday morning that the network had green-lit its third series to take place within "The Walking Dead" universe.

The as-yet-unnamed new series will be based on the comics created by author Robert Kirkman, Tony Moore and Charlie Adlard. The series was co-created by Scott M. Gimple, the chief content officer of the "Walking Dead" universe, and Matt Negrete, a longtime writer and producer of "The Walking Dead" who will act as the showrunner for this new project. The show will begin production on 10 new episodes this summer in the state of Virginia, with plans to air on AMC sometime in 2020.

"Showing audiences an unseen pocket of 'The Walking Dead' universe steeped in new mythology is a very cool way to celebrate a 'Decade of the Dead' on TV and over 15 years of Robert Kirkman's brilliant comic," said Gimple in a release. "Matt Negrete is one of the best writer-producers in 'TWD's' long history — I'm thrilled to be working beside him to tell stories unlike we've seen before, taking our first step into an even larger world."

Negrete also shared his excitement to dig his heels deeper into the world created in the comics. "I'm beyond excited to be a part of this new show set in 'The Walking Dead' universe," said Negrete in the release. "Writing and producing for the original series has been the job of a lifetime and I'm honored to be working with Scott and all the fine 'Dead' folks at AMC in this new capacity. I can't wait for the fans of the franchise to see what we've been cooking up!"

While there have been no casting announcements for this new zombie-filled project, a press release from AMC explained that the show would follow the lives of two young female protagonists who were born into this cruel world and must choose what kind of people they will grow up to be. As fans of both "The Walking Dead" and "Fear the Walking Dead" know all too well, it could go one of two ways.

"We're thrilled that the 'Dead' will keep walking into a new corner of the post-apocalyptic world, a corner that will present stories and characters unlike any that 'The Walking Dead' has dramatized thus far, and that is bound to excite one of the most passionate fanbases in television," said David Madden, president of programming for AMC Networks and AMC Studios in the release. "Scott has been an invaluable leader for the universe since taking on the role of chief content officer, with a distinct and innovative vision for the franchise. Likewise, we're excited to have Matt, who has been a crucial part of 'The Walking Dead' family for over five years and penned many memorable episodes of 'TWD,' at the helm of this original series."

Back on the hunt with 'Killing Eve'

The stars of the popular dark comedy talk about tricking fans with a false sense of security and giving opportunities to different voices.

patrick.king@metro.us

Yes, the wait is finally over. The insanely popular hit BBC series "Killing Eve" returned for its second season last weekend to give fans another glimpse into the unpredictable game of cat and mouse between the hilariously clever and devious Russian assassin named Villanelle and the American detective on her trail, Eve Polastri. The complicated relationship between the two lead roles, played with electric charm by Jodie Comer and Sandra Oh, had won over legions of fans, bringing the show to a larger audience on AMC this season.

The cast of the show appeared at a conference hosted by the network on Monday morning for a series of different panels that revolved around such topics as visibility and inclusivity in television as well as the use of comedy to heighten the dramatic punch. Both of these topics were perfect for this unique and brilliantly constructed show, as with how dark and comedic it is, it is also led by a predominantly female cast, with an Asian-American, Sandra Oh, as its principal lead. Oh explained her initial surprise at realizing that she was cast as Eve in a discussion with journalist Alicia Quarles.

"I feel like Eve was clearly at least a white woman [in the books]," said Oh. "I was lucky to be at that point in my career where I was offered this script and I read it... I had to figure out for a second which character I was playing. I think that the point is, even this far down a line in one's career, as an actor of color or just myself, this far along [I] still could not see myself in this leading role. I felt very ashamed of myself for not having been able to see it. I was talking with my agent and I'm scrolling through and I'm like 'I don't get it.' I'm scrolling through and I'm like, 'Who am I playing?' And [my agent] was like, 'Eve. You're playing Eve!'"

Fiona Shaw, who plays Eve's superior in MI6 Carolyn Martens, chimed in, saying that casting Oh was also a revelatory choice in terms of the British social dynamic in these types of thrillers.

"There is something so interesting about a good deed producing another good deed," explained Shaw. "The casting of Sandra in 'Killing Eve' absolutely stopped thriller British spy stories being about the class system. Because suddenly, we had this American voice in. The whole ceiling shattered. It was very refreshing for everybody... because you couldn't do that endless thing about wondering whether someone is looking up or looking down on someone."

With the show's villain, Villanelle, the choices by the show's writing staff, along with the performance of a truly magnetic Jodie Comer, combine to really let the viewer inside the mind of a rampant psychopath.

But the most interesting aspect to this is that the viewer is immediately torn on whom to root for once they get to know her better. Villanelle will put on her flawless dry wit as she lures her victims into her traps, breaking the slow-building tension just before she exhibits her total lack of remorse. It's a belly laugh that can hurt and delight in equal measure.

"What I love about the comedy moments is that it lulls the audience into this false sense of security and just as they are feeling comfortable [snaps fingers]," said Comer. "I know that's what I enjoyed in playing those moments. It's that element of surprise. I think it's so important that we have those moments. She's flamboyant, witty and extremely charismatic. That was always present within the script."

Breaking into the mind of such a cold-blooded yet likable serial killer was a part of the fun for executive producer Sally Woodward Gentle.

"I think she entertains herself," explained Gentle. "I think she finds herself hilariously funny. She is her biggest fan. What we did quite a lot when we were in the room, when we were talking to Phoebe and the other writers, was to try to get a sense of what any of us would do if you would wake up in the morning without any fear and there was no sense of consequence. I think that then liberates you massively. For a character like Villanelle, that's sort of wish fulfillment. We love playing with that and also being dark and being really naughty [laughs]."

Season 2 of "Killing Eve" currently airs Sunday nights on both AMC and BBC America. On the heels of the season 2 premiere, it was also announced Monday that the show will return for a third season.

The family man of comedy

Michael Yo's comedy special "Blasian" is available on Amazon now.

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

The world of comedy has room for a lot — politics, opinions, making light of situations, heartbreak, romantic endeavors. The list could go on and on. What the comedy world doesn't always have room for, however, is love. Not just the lust kind of love or the admiration kind of love, but pure, unadulterated love. Comedian Michael Yo wants to change that. Instead of focusing on the darkness in the world today, he would rather crack jokes in the light and talk about the love he has for his parents, wife, son and the hilarious dynamic his family has. Yo sat down with Metro to talk about his career, his new comedy special on Amazon and his outlook on the comedy world today.

Michael Yo. PROVIDED

Yo first got his start in the entertainment world through radio at the young age of 14. "I just fell in love with it. Radio basically got me to television," says Yo.

Now, the Houston native has his own show on Sirius XM's Entertainment Weekly Radio. "Radio is amazing because if someone doesn't agree with you, they can call you up and talk to you. People can reach out to you on social media about things, but you don't have to read it. But when they call up it's great, it keeps you up-to-date on what America is actually thinking. I think when you just get caught up in movies and TV, you get stuck in a bubble away from what normal people think or feel, because you're not around it. It's that Hollywood bubble. On "The Michael Yo Show" I talk to people all day. I love feeling connected to them and you can feel the pulse of what they really want to talk about. Not just the left or right opinions, but people's actual opinions. That's what I love."

Radio provides a great outlet for Yo to talk to audiences around the country, whereas stand-up gives the comedian an amazing outlet to talk about his life. Yo's latest special, "Blasian," is available for home viewing on Amazon now, and the 44-year-old does not hold back when talking about his favorite subject: his family. "I started comedy eight years ago and after I had my son, I wanted something on tape that all my family could be a part of. So during the special, my parents come in, my wife comes in and my son comes in."

Yo's son, Oliver, has been the continuous motivation for his comedy specials and the main reason he is overly joyed that his legacy will live on. "I have this fear of something happening and my son not knowing how much I love him. That scares the hell out of me. He's young, he doesn't fully understand. We can't have a conversation about it yet. This is something that is now on tape forever. Hopefully, I'm around for a long time, but now, my son Oliver is going to know how much I love him. If he wants to look back on it 20, 30 or 40 years from now, he can do that."

Yo likes the fact that his comedy is "family-friendly." He wants it to be a breath of fresh air in a world that rarely seems to get one. "That's the type of comedy I want to do and that's the type I bring onstage. It's a very uplifting comedy special and it's all about family. It's okay to love your wife and kids and talk about the love and positivity of that. It's a comedy special — you don't have to hate everything about marriage. Plus, it's okay to talk about your parents and how it was growing up. I wanted to get that message out as well because it's dark out there. I want comedy to be an escape, and positive and uplifting."

FOX found Yo's point of view refreshing as well, so much so that the network recently announced they are developing a new sitcom with the comedian based on his stand-up. "It's my life and exactly what you see onstage. It's about my family and my parents and my wife and their dynamics. Without going into detail, I'm writing the new pilot now, so we'll see what happens."

Yo's view on the comedy world and life is invigorating, and some highlights of his career have been meeting others with that same outlook. Being in the biz a long time has led Yo to make many friendships and connections with Hollywood "A-listers" such as Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson, Will Smith and Kevin Hart. Yo says they have had a huge impact on his career and his motivation to keep the positivity going. "It's not just for Instagram. These people are really like that, they keep pushing. That really stands out to me as a highlight, when we kind of see these people as not obtainable, and when they are obtainable and go above and beyond to make you feel special. That blows me away. It's so inspiring and motivating."

Yo is willing to go above and beyond to keep his career in the light. His love for his family and comedy go hand in hand, making it relatable, uplifting and downright hilarious. The proof is in the pudding.

A ring ceremony in the home opener following a World Series-winning season is supposed to be the ultimate.

But there just seems to be a few things "off" about what will transpire at Fenway Park this afternoon.

First, it is expected to be in the high 30s and low 40s during the game today, with clouds and the potential for rain. It just seems like previous Opening Days following a World Series win were always sun-kissed.

Second is the absolutely horrible start that this year's Red Sox team has gotten off to. With a 3-8 record, this Red Sox team tied for the worst start in franchise history and it is the worst record for a defending World Series champion since 1998.

Third are the elephants that are NOT going to be in the room for Opening Day festivities. It has become tradition in this town that when the Patriots win the Super Bowl, they are honored at Fenway on Opening Day. Conspicuous in their absences today will be the three figureheads of the Patriots organization in Tom Brady, Bill Belichick and Robert Kraft. This could be in protest to The Boston Globe, which is owned by Sox owner John Henry, filing a motion to intervene in the Kraft Florida prostitution case. The Globe joined several other media organizations recently in opposing Kraft's motion to have video evidence suppressed.

There will be plenty of pomp and circumstance today at Fenway Park.

GETTY IMAGES

Maybe the Sox save face by having now-retired Pats tight end Rob Gronkowski come out for the ceremony, but the absences of the franchise's "Big 3" will no doubt make things a bit awkward.

Pre-game ceremonies will begin at 1 p.m. today (NESN) at Fenway as the team will unveil the 2018 World Series championship banner and present the team with World Series rings.

The Boston Pops Orchestra will perform the national anthem.

Oh, about this team

It's going to be really hard to say goodbye to 2018 today, because 2019 ain't lookin' so hot.

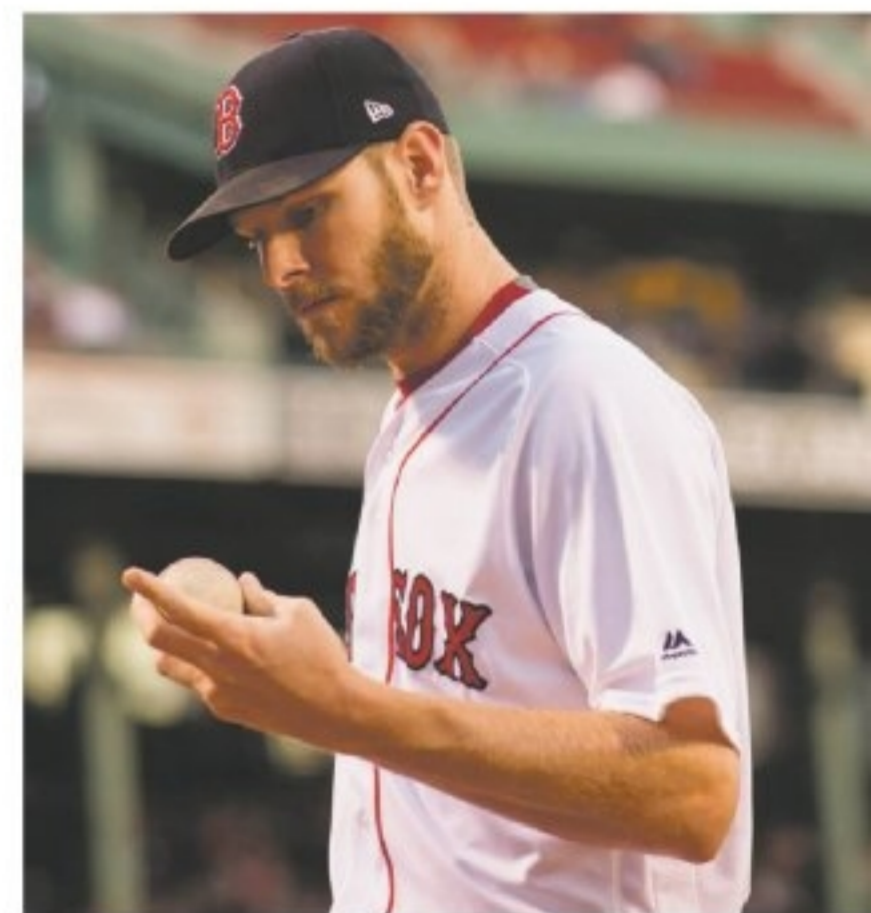

The Red Sox have plenty of time to turn this thing around, but there is a precedent for this franchise in having letdown years following a championship. In 2005, the Sox won three less games than they did the season before and fell in the ALDS. In 2008, they won one less game and lost in the ALCS. And in 2014, the Sox won a whopping 26 less games than they had the previous year and finished dead last in the AL East.

This 2018-19 group is immensely more talented than the 2013-14 squads, so don't expect anywhere near that big of a drop-off. But human nature does suggest that hangover seasons are likely, particularly in baseball, where there hasn't been a repeat World Series winner in nearly 20 years.

As mentioned above, the Blue Jays are also having their issues out of the gate in 2019 as they also have a 3-8 record. So maybe today is when the Sox start to get right.

Toronto will send Matt Shoemaker (2-0, 0.00 ERA) to the hill to square off against Chris Sale (0-2, 8.00 ERA).

Chris Sale.

Aries Take care of business first before someone complains. Once your tasks are complete, move on to enjoyable activities that will ease stress and keep you fit.

Taurus Take your time going over your tax return or other financial papers. An oversight on your part or by someone taking care of your affairs will be costly.

Gemini Don't let anxiety kick in and cause you to make an emotional mistake. Look for the positive in whatever transpires to ease stress and make better choices.

Cancer It's time to have some fun. If you work on a project that stimulates you mentally, good things will happen. A relationship will develop faster if each party pursues a common goal.

Leo How you help people will determine what others think of you. If you want to make a change, consider how it will affect everyone around you. The right move will lead to new opportunities.

Virgo Don't jump into something you haven't had a chance to study. Stick to methods you know are safe and sound, and keep to the people you know you can trust.

Libra Learn all you can and connect with people who can help you make healthy and wise decisions. Don't let anyone put demands on you.

Scorpio Keep a close watch over your money and possessions. Take care of important details yourself. Share your feelings with a loved one and make plans that will bring you closer together.

Sagittarius Network and mingle with people you can learn from. Gravitate toward the experts, not to those trying to pitch you something risky or unrealistic. Don't share private information.

Capricorn If you reconnect with someone you enjoyed doing things with in the past, you'll come up with an interesting idea that will bring about a positive change and a different lifestyle.

Aquarius Get involved in something that you believe in. Taking physical action to make life better for people unable to fend for themselves will be gratifying. Home improvements are encouraged.

Pisces Be careful what you say. Stick to the rules and offer positive feedback. Help others, but don't let anyone take advantage of you. Take precautions to avoid injury and arguments. EUGENIA LAST
